Photographer Bree Petersen had traveled the world, meeting all kinds of people. But when her high school class had its reunion, she returned to her roots, Key West, and her childhood friend, Miguel Rivas.

Once a poor Cuban refugee, Miguel was now a successful businessman. But he hadn't forgotten his roots, either--or Bree, the unattainable golden girl of his youth. Seeing her again brought back memories . . . and passions. This time, he vowed, he wouldn't let their differences, or their childhood friendship, stand between them. He would stake his claim as a man . . . and as her lover.
